

Case File 07

“We’re updating our terms”: script, description, thumbnails and SEO

Prepared 4 October 2026

How this follows the brief

- Multi-colour slides: every scene has its own background combination: scene 1 purple & black, scene 2 grey & red, scene 3 sky blue, then emerald & navy, charcoal & orange, pink & plum, navy & gold and mint & forest, repeating. The scene table shows the colour for each.
- New hook: the supplier email everyone gets and nobody reads, then “that email might have just put your prices up 18%”.
- New format: a timeline (Day 1 → Day 92) with a progress bar along the top; the only one of the four formats not used yet.
- New fonts: Oswald, Manrope, Space Mono and Lora italic (not used in Cases 01–06).
- Language & SEO: conversational British English; researched search phrases (“updating our terms and conditions”, “change the terms of a contract”, “variation clause”, “continued use means acceptance”) spoken and shown early and used in the title, description and tags.
- Conversion: “comment TERMS below” prompt plus “dogetlawyer.com, link in bio” with a LINK IN BIO button.
- Compliance: no prices or offers, legal points hedged as “general position”, all names/figures fictional and labelled, standard fine print on the closing card.

Before posting

- ☐ Record the voiceover (clean read on page 4) and drop it onto the silent audio track.
- ☐ Make sure dogetlawyer.com is the link in bio.
- ☐ Upload the thumbnail / vertical cover and paste the title, description, tags and pinned comment.
- ☐ Check average % viewed after 24 hours.

Files

Item	File (repo: sobarslap/DGL_private)
Video	videos/dogetlawyer_case-file-07_1080x1920.mp4 (1:45, 1080x1920, silent track for VO)
Thumbnails	thumbnails/case-07_thumbnail_1280x720.png • thumbnails/case-07_cover_1080x1920.png

“We’re updating our terms and conditions”

The supplier email nobody reads, and what it can quietly change.

Video file	videos/dogetlawyer_case-file-07_1080x1920.mp4
Spec	1:45 (105 s) · 1080×1920 vertical · 30 fps · captions burned in · silent audio track ready for voiceover
Format	Timeline: hook → “let’s run the clock” → Day 1 / Day 2 / Day 30 / Day 31–90 / Day 91 / Day 92 → the law (variation clause; silence vs carrying on) → what to do on Day 1 (3 steps) → product → comment prompt → link in bio
Look	Every scene has its own colour combination, per the brief: scene 1 purple & black, scene 2 grey & red, scene 3 sky blue, then emerald & navy, charcoal & orange, pink & plum, navy & gold, mint & forest, repeating. Text colour is set per scene for contrast. Oswald headlines, Manrope body, Space Mono labels, Lora italic asides, faint diagonal pinstripes, progress bar along the top.
Topic	Suppliers changing their terms by email (“continued use means you accept”), variation clauses, and acceptance by conduct.

Thumbnails

Left: YouTube thumbnail 1280×720 (thumbnails/case-07_thumbnail_1280x720.png). Right: vertical cover for Shorts / Reels / TikTok 1080×1920 (thumbnails/case-07_cover_1080x1920.png).

Titles

Recommended: “We’re Updating Our Terms and Conditions” — Read This Before You Archive It

Alternative: Can a Supplier Change the Terms of a Contract? UK Small Business Guide

Add the UK flag emoji at the end of the title when posting.

Hook (first 3–7 seconds)

“Got an email saying, we’re updating our terms and conditions? Course you didn’t read it. Nobody does. But that email might have just put your prices up eighteen percent.” (On screen: “WE’RE UPDATING OUR TERMS AND CONDITIONS.” → PUT YOUR PRICES UP 18%.)

Script: scene by scene

Time	Section	On screen	Voiceover
0:00–0:04	The email Purple & black	NEW EMAIL · “WE’RE UPDATING OUR TERMS AND CONDITIONS.” · You didn’t read it. Nobody does.	Got an email saying, we’re updating our terms and conditions? Course you didn’t read it. Nobody does.
0:04–0:08	The email Grey & red	PUT YOUR PRICES UP 18%. (fictional example)	But that email might have just put your prices up eighteen percent.
0:08–0:11	The timeline Sky blue	LET’S RUN THE CLOCK · HOW A “QUICK UPDATE” PLAYS OUT.	Let’s run the clock on how a quick update plays out.
0:11–0:18	Day 1 Emerald & navy	DAY 1 · email: “Important: changes to our terms and conditions... Continued use of our services means you accept the new terms.” (highlighted)	Day one. The email lands. Important changes to our terms and conditions. Continued use of our services means you accept the new terms.
0:18–0:22	Day 2 Charcoal & orange	DAY 2 · YOU ARCHIVE IT.	Day two. Busy week. You archive it. Same as every other one.
0:22–0:30	Day 30 Pink & plum	DAY 30 · WHAT QUIETLY CHANGED: prices reviewed every quarter · notice 60 → 90 days · liability cap halved	Day thirty. The new terms kick in. Prices now reviewed every quarter. Your notice period goes from sixty days to ninety. The liability cap, halved.
0:30–0:35	Day 31–90 Navy & gold	DAY 31–90 · YOU KEEP ORDERING.	You keep ordering, same as always. No idea anything changed.
0:35–0:41	Day 91 Mint & forest	DAY 91 · invoice: last quarter £4,000 → this quarter £4,720 · +18%	Day ninety-one. The invoice lands. Four grand last quarter. Four thousand seven hundred and twenty this time. Up eighteen percent.
0:41–0:46	Day 92 Purple & black	DAY 92 · THEY SEND YOU... THE EMAIL FROM DAY ONE.	You push back. And they send you the email from day one.
0:46–0:50	The law Grey & red	CAN A SUPPLIER JUST CHANGE THE TERMS ON YOU?	So, can a supplier just change the terms on you?
0:50–0:58	The law Sky blue	USUALLY... ONLY IF THE CONTRACT LETS THEM. · look for a “variation clause”	Usually, only if the contract lets them. That’s a variation clause. It says they can change the terms, and how much notice they have to give.
0:58–1:07	The law Emerald & navy	SAYING NOTHING ISN’T ALWAYS AGREEING... ...BUT CARRYING ON CAN BE. · general position, England & Wales	And here’s the catch. Saying nothing isn’t always agreeing. But carrying on ordering after the new terms kick in can count as accepting them.
1:07–1:19	Your move Charcoal & orange	REWIND TO DAY 1. DO THIS: 01 Don’t archive it · 02 Disagree? Say so in writing · 03 Diary the start date	So rewind to day one. Don’t archive it. Read what’s changing: price, notice, liability. If you don’t agree, say so in writing, before the start date. And put that date in the diary, with a name against it.
1:19–1:29	The fix Pink & plum	Product: TERMS CHANGES · ALL SUPPLIERS (Harrow Print new terms 1 Nov · Kestrel version 3 on file · Norbury no change)	That’s what Dogetlawyer’s for. Every supplier, every version of their terms on record, and the date the new ones kick in. So you can see what changed.
1:29–1:33	The fix Navy & gold	SO DAY ONE NEVER SLIPS PAST YOU.	So day one never slips past you again.
1:33–1:38	Your turn Mint & forest	HAD ONE OF THESE EMAILS THIS YEAR? · COMMENT “TERMS” BELOW	Be honest. Had one of these emails this year? Comment terms below.

Time	Section	On screen	Voiceover
1:38–1:45	Dogetlawyer Purple & black	DOGETLAWYER · KNOW WHEN YOUR TERMS CHANGE. · dogetlawyer.com · LINK IN BIO · fine print	Check what you've agreed to at dogetlawyer.com. Link in bio.

Voiceover: clean read for the voice artist

Delivery: chatty and a bit knowing at the start, then a ticking-clock rhythm through the Day 1 / Day 30 / Day 91 beats, calm and practical for the three steps. About 160 words per minute

Got an email saying, we're updating our terms and conditions? Course you didn't read it. Nobody does. But that email might have just put your prices up eighteen percent. Let's run the clock on how a quick update plays out. Day one. The email lands. Important changes to our terms and conditions. Continued use of our services means you accept the new terms. Day two. Busy week. You archive it. Same as every other one. Day thirty. The new terms kick in. Prices now reviewed every quarter. Your notice period goes from sixty days to ninety. The liability cap, halved. You keep ordering, same as always. No idea anything changed. Day ninety-one. The invoice lands. Four grand last quarter. Four thousand seven hundred and twenty this time. Up eighteen percent. You push back. And they send you the email from day one. So, can a supplier just change the terms on you? Usually, only if the contract lets them. That's a variation clause. It says they can change the terms, and how much notice they have to give. And here's the catch. Saying nothing isn't always agreeing. But carrying on ordering after the new terms kick in can count as accepting them. So rewind to day one. Don't archive it. Read what's changing: price, notice, liability. If you don't agree, say so in writing, before the start date. And put that date in the diary, with a name against it. That's what Dogetlawyer's for. Every supplier, every version of their terms on record, and the date the new ones kick in. So you can see what changed. So day one never slips past you again. Be honest. Had one of these emails this year? Comment terms below. Check what you've agreed to at dogetlawyer.com. Link in bio.

Description (YouTube / Shorts; trim for Instagram & TikTok)

Got an email saying “we’re updating our terms and conditions”? Course you didn’t read it. But it might have just put your prices up, lengthened your notice period or cut what they’ll pay if things go wrong.

Can a supplier just change the terms of a contract? Usually only if the contract lets them, via a variation clause. Saying nothing isn’t always agreeing, but carrying on ordering after the new terms start can count as accepting them.

What to do on Day 1:

1. Don’t archive it: read what’s changing (price, notice period, liability)
2. Don’t agree? Say so in writing before the start date
3. Diary the start date, with a name against it

→ Check what you’ve agreed to at dogetlawyer.com (link in bio)

0:00 The email nobody reads · 0:11 Day 1 → Day 92 · 0:48 Can they change the terms? · 1:07 What to do on Day 1 · 1:20 Keeping track · 1:37 Your turn

General position in England & Wales; outcomes turn on the facts and the wording of your contract. All names and figures shown are fictional examples. Dogetlawyer is contract management software for UK small businesses, not a substitute for legal advice.

Tags

updating our terms and conditions, supplier changed terms, can a supplier change the terms of a contract, variation clause, variation of contract UK, change of terms notice, continued use means acceptance, supplier price increase, notice period, terms of business, small business UK, B2B contract, contract law UK, supplier contract

Hashtags

#smallbusinessuk #ukbusiness #termsandconditions #contractlaw #smallprint #businesstips

Pinned comment

Had a “we’re updating our terms” email this year? Comment TERMS (add a pointing-down emoji when posting)

SEO keywords used (and where)

Keyword	Where it appears
updating our terms and conditions	First words of the video (VO + on screen); title; description; tags
change the terms (of a contract)	Spoken + on-screen question (0:48); title alternative variation clause	Spoken + on screen (law scene); description; tags
continued use means you accept	On the Day 1 email (highlighted) and spoken
price increase / prices up 18%	Hook (0:04) and Day 91 invoice
notice period	Day 30 and Day 1 steps
terms of business / small business UK	Email copy, description, tags

Sources & compliance

- General contract-law position in England & Wales: a party can usually only vary a contract unilaterally if the contract allows it (a variation clause, often with notice requirements); silence alone is not generally acceptance, but continuing to perform/order after notice of new terms can amount to acceptance by conduct. Hedged on screen: “general position, England & Wales · outcomes turn on the facts”.
- Supporting UK guidance reviewed: Harper James (“It should not be assumed that continued use will always amount to acceptance”), Sprintlaw (variation needs consent and compliance with any variation clause), LexisNexis (variation clauses must be clear and properly invoked; notice requirements).
- All names, invoices and the 18% figure are fictional and labelled; no statistics. No prices or offers; the product is shown holding saved versions of terms (no email/inbox sync). Standard fine print on the closing card.